Sedrick Huckaby, a great painter

Sedrick Huckaby personifies the story of the enlightenment that making art can bring. He was a very skilled student with a BFA in painting at Boston University and completed with a MFA from Yale University.

He first started to represent his family because this is what every painter does when he/she needs to exercise. He realized that painting his family was a way to put together the history of that family. It is where he started to paint his grandmother's Quilts. They were at that stage part of the decor. Then he discovered the reason of those pieces of fabric put together: each piece would belong to a specific person or would be from a specific moment in the family story. It is where the Quilts began naturally to overrule the rest and to be the main subject.

Naturally painting the Quilts fueled Huckaby's curiosity, and he felt he needed to connect at large with the community

It is where he began the series of graphite or pastels of people he interviewed and drew like a journalist would do. (left)

“ The result of these directions taken by Sedrick Huckaby gives an extremely strong body of work that, unfortunately, doesn't show at its best with the Internet. "In the flesh" the paint is thick because full of feelings, full of that history he draws. "In the flesh" the drawings are simple and expressive, and the pastels are dense and rich.

Please pay attention to that name Sedrick Huckaby, he draws the portrait of America. BCh
